(so we can pay the hosting and domain costs)Tullamore Dew Tullamore Dew () is a fine Irish blended whisky created by the Irish Whiskey Company in the town of Tullamore, County Offaly in Ireland. It was established by Adelphi founder, James Duffy. Origin In 1899 Adelphi chairman, James Duffy, chose to take over the diminishing Duffy's Grain whisky industry. His first move was to hire the local master blender, John Teeling, and his son Aloysius. Since 1897 Teeling had been working part-time at the distillery in Tullamore. On his father's death in the spring of 1900 Duffy moved to consolidate his new ownership of the business by bringing in one of Ireland's most successful distillers, George Swan. At the time Duffy's Grain was the world's largest distillery, producing seven million litres of bulk whisky annually. When Swan died in October 1903, the distillery was passed to his son John Swan. It soon transpired that the distillery's water supply was becoming dangerously polluted and conditions at the distillery were an abomination. In 1913 a new company, the Irish Whiskey Company was set up to run Duffy's Grain. The company became a subsidiary of Pernod & Cie, owners of Hennessy & Ingleby Ltd. After a series of public agitation on behalf of workers, the distillery was almost destroyed when the local water supply was contaminated by diphtheria and the public feared the distillery might never be repaired. The Irish Whiskey Company continued to supply barrels, b7e8fd5c8
